

NEW ABSTRACT

A method for managing the power consumption of a battery powered radio device includes performing a radio function according to a first operating mode and monitoring the battery capacity. When the battery capacity is less than a pre-determined amount, then the radio function is maintained according to a second operating mode in place of the first operating mode. The second operating mode has a reduced rate of power consumption in relation to the radio function compared to the first operating mode.